Dear Sir/Madam,

I would like to apply for the challenge, "Purchaser", with you.

Back in the days, my father always told me to save the money instead of spending it. Well, during my childhood - that candy at the shop was more interesting than to save the money whenever those words are something that I try to follow.

During my time with GIGABYTE as Nordic Business/Office manager, handled it all as it was my own company – budget, spending, campaigns, contracts, employee, strategic plan and so on-, I learned how important it is to have the correct tools available for you and your team. To spend money correct isn't to be compared with my childhood candy. A correct investment will generate its cost over time. But how do I know what's correct or not?

One of my strength is that I find it important to know how things work, understand the purpose of it – no matter what it is. I'm very fast learning and I have no problem to understand the more advanced part of the story. This results in a very wide knowledge, from construction to programming. My expertise circulates around computer hardware, workstations, servers and all related but I do also master work as a handyman. All these things combined help me to filter thing very faster, to get the best and correct solution right away.

My previous position has helped me to improve my technique regards negotiation. I have very good experience when it comes to this part and build up a serious business relationship. Something I faced every day.

In general, I find technology very interesting and especially such technology that remove standard tasks in order to save time (or just that you don't have to do that standard thing that we all know isn't that fun). I live by myself in the Center of Malmö. I bought the apartment approx. six-years ago and I did a complete renovation, stretched over almost 3-4 years. Of course, we find technology here. It's an automated smart-home based on Z-Wave solution. I have, as I assume you understands now, great interest of new technology, electronics, and make things easier.

I believe that it would be worthwhile for us to meet face-to-face to discuss the position and how I could make a positive contribution to your organization. Please contact me at the number or email address above to arrange an appointment.

Thanks for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,
Rasmus Persson
